Grace won the race easily. Although she looked tense, I was so sure she'd break the record again. Everybody was immensely proud of her. She really deserved the medal around her neck. But instead of boasting about it, she just said she was lucky. That's so typical of her.

Task 3

Questions 11-15

Read about Evan Ringer.

For questions 11-15, complete the form with one or two words in each space.

Write your answer only here in this exam booklet.

There is an example at the beginning (0).

Evan Ringer – Geneticist

People born with abnormal eyes might soon have replacements with their own DNA, thanks to research by scientists like Evan Ringer.

The 35-year-old geneticist got his interest in research from his father. "My dad was a great teacher. He made me really interested in the world around me, asking me questions and encouraging me to find answers. When the local car factory closed, there was no more work for mechanics like him, so my mother went to work and he looked after me. I was a bit unusual: the kids around me hero-worshipped the Scottish footballer Richard Gough, while the person I looked up to was Charles Darwin. I wanted to be just like him."

Ringer won a scholarship to Edinburgh University to study engineering. He didn't enjoy the student lifestyle, though, and left after the first year. He had already been a waiter to get work experience but thought that the kitchen looked much more satisfying and got a job as a junior chef. Four years later, he was a chef de partie in a top restaurant in London.

He loved the job, but had to return to Edinburgh. He applied for chefs' jobs, but ended up studying food science. After switching to biochemistry, he spent the summer researching the parasite that causes malaria in mice. After graduation, he went on to research for a PhD. He still enjoys cooking, but now only for fun. He is now at the Centre for Regenerative Medicine in Edinburgh, working on the growth of eyes in the laboratory.
