Celebrities have been part of the public domain ever since the rise of mass media and popular culture and with the development of new technologies are becoming even more so. The question, however, is whether the fact that celebrities live in the public eye because of their work means that they have to share their private lives too, or whether they have the right to keep their private lives to themselves.

Many claim that if you enjoy the life of a celebrity, you need to share your private life as well. It is often difficult to draw the line between publicity and private lives and stars do want and even seek publicity, so it is only natural that there is an interest in the parts that they do not disclose as well. Also, celebrities have considerable influence and sharing their own private troubles can help many people deal with theirs and even be therapeutic.

On the other hand, it is very difficult to live your life completely in the open, as even celebrities have secrets that they don't want to come out and that could be damaging to them or their families. Furthermore, the exploitation of celebrities' private lives is often done to the advantage of other people or professions such as reporters, who are just selling other people's lives to make money, which is unethical and often illegal.

To sum up, celebrities' private lives are in the public domain up to a point where they can be beneficial to both sides, including the fans, but there also needs to be a limit to protect the rights of all people who want to keep their lives to themselves. I think everybody has the right to protect their privacy regardless of their profession and the benefits that publicity may bring to all who are involved.

Being rich and famous is a situation that is often seen as the ultimate success. While some people say that being a celebrity means losing your right to privacy, others claim that celebrities should pay the price.

First of all, celebrity status means the person has a huge number of fans and general public can identify them. Wherever they go, people recognise them and ask for autographs or photos. Second of all, human beings are curious and want to know details about others, especially someone they admire greatly. Media use this curiosity to gain money by finding out private things about celebrities and publishing them online.

However, others say that losing privacy comes with the job. One point is that being famous means almost everybody knows you, which means you are not a private person. It's either one or another. Second point is that celebrities earn so much money and it's only fair that they sacrifice something in return for earning crazy amounts of cash in a short time. Not being private also keeps the fans and followers interested and money coming in.

In conclusion, although it is true that rich and famous people have to accept losing privacy because people want to know about them, interact with them and media shares information about them for money, there are people who think this is the way it should be because they are well paid and being famous and private at the same time is impossible. I think they should have the right to privacy because they are human beings and have equal rights like everyone else.

Everybody wants to be famous today because celebrities are popular and we all love them because their exciting lives. We follow their posts, their live broadcasts, we dress like them, we are interested in their lives. Their fame brings them riches and we all desire to be rich like celebrities.

Celebrities don't have the right to privacy. They are public persons, they are on social networks and we all see and observe them. They can educate us, for example in cooking shows like Jamie Oliver, or in fashion. Firstly, they show us how to live and dress fashionable and behave nicely. We follow them and that brings us entertainment and joy. Therefore we also learn about their way of life, we are introduced to their families. Some are popular in sports, some in fashion and they present for us role models. They have no right to privacy, it is their duty to show others how they live and survive. They are celebrities.

Celebrities are usually very rich because their work brings money from movies or concert tours. They have sponsors that finance or buy clothes for them or shoes. They have modern, big villas with many expensive possessions like Xboxes, iPhones, swimming pools or jacuzzis and they show us videos of that in Instagram. Secondly they are real people, they have real-life problems and worries. Their children go to school, get bullied or not, they get sick sometimes and they must have privacy like regular people and not paparazzi all day around their house. That is pretty serious and rude.

All in all, celebrities must have privacy like regular people, but on the other hand they are public people who are very rich. I think I wouldn't like being a celeb because I appreciate my privacy and I don't like when people take photos of me.

Some say that being a celebrity means losing your right to privacy. Others claim that celebrities should pay the price. This is a very important question for many people. I will tell you what I think.

I must say celebrities are famous, I know many celebrities. I see them on Instagram and Facebook. Many say they should not have privacy. They have lots of money and get many things from their fame for example free gifts and special treatments. People believe that fans and media have the right to know about their personal lives and they must pay the price. Why is that? Some celebrities share a lot of their lives on social media so people think they don't care about privacy. In the other hand, others people think that celebrities are still humans and they must have privacy like everyone else. They have families and personal problems that should not be shown everywhere. The paparazzi are very annoying and sometimes dangerous. They follow them all the time and picture them. This is very stressful. I understand the problem.

In my opinion, celebrities must have some privacy, just like normal people. They work hard, they have families and leave them alone. They mustn't show everything to the world. Everyone should respect their personal space. People can be so rude.

Being a celeb is not easy cause you loose your right to privasy and every one is waching you all time. Some people thinks that you choose to be famous you must expect to loose your privasy and live under constant eyes. They beleve that celebs don't deserve private life because they gets all benefits and money and then its natural that people wants to know every thing of them. Other peple says that celebs should pay price for loseing privasy. They say that celebs choose to be at public vision, and they must accept bad side of that like always paparazzi and rude fans. My freind even say be famous mens you have no choice but to give your secret life, and its normal for a celebrity. I think that its very sad when you are famous and you cant have time for your self. You choosed fame, but some times you deserve little brake to be lone and rested with your family and freinds. It is not fare that cameras and reporters make celebs felt tired and stresed. In concluson, both view has some truth. Celebs loose privasy cause they become famous but at same thing they should be ready to pay price for that, cause sometime they need litle more privasy.
